BLAINE'S EULOGY

Upon H. A. Garfield, the Martyred Statesman.

His Laurels Won on the Field of Battle.

Comparison With Great Leaders---Rank as a Debater.

Invaluable and Enduring Work in Congress.

Example of What Ability and Ambition May Do.

WASHINGTON, February 27.—Prior to 10 o'clock this morning admission to the capitol was refused to all except members of the houses of congress and their employees, but at the hour the doors were thrown open to persons holding tickets to the memorial service of the late J. A. Garfield and soon the galleries were filled to their utmost capacity. A large majority of spectators out of respect to the occasion had for the most part discarded bright colors and sombre black was the prevailing hue. There were no signs of mourning. A full length portrait of the late president hung just back of the chairs of the presiding officers, being itself undraped. Members of the house early in attendance were all arrayed in black. In the lobby back of the speaker's desk the marine band was stationed and at intervals from 10 till noon, discoursed solemn music.

Among the distinguished guests first to arrive were Judge Bancroft who took a seat directly in front of the clerk's desk. Among the guests who came an early hour occupied seats on the floor were Generals Schenck, Foster, Hamilton and Governors Hoyt of Pennsylvania and Ingersoll of Connecticut.

At 11:40 Generals Sheridan, Sherman, Hancock, Howard and Meigs and Admirals Ammen and Rodgers entered and were assigned seats on the left of the speaker's desk, and a few minutes later members of the diplomatic corps in full regalia were ushered in headed by the Hawaiian minister as dean of the corps. Their brilliant costumes only served to throw in strongest relief the dark attire of the members of congress who sat immediately behind them.

The supreme court of the district headed by Marshall Cragy were the next arrivals. Dr. Bliss was also in attendance. Mrs. Blaine occupied a front seat in the gallery reserved for the friends of the president.

At precisely 12 o'clock the house was called to order by the speaker and prayer was offered by the chaplain. The speaker then said: "This day has been dedicated by action of the two houses of congress to services in commemoration of the life and death of Jas. A. Garfield late president of the United States. This house is now assembled and ready to perform its part." The resolutions setting apart today for memorial services were then read by Clerk McPherson.

At 12:10 the senate was announced, and all rose as the senators headed by the officers of that body, entered and took assigned seats. These were followed by the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court dressed in their robes of office. Again the assembled multitude arose as the president of the United States and his cabinet were announced. They were accompanied by Senator Sherman and Representative McKinley, chairman of the committee of arrangements. The president took a front seat on the right of the presiding officer's chair.

At 12:30 the orator of the day, James G. Blaine, was announced. The ceremonies were then opened by a solemn prayer by Chaplain Power, of the house after which President Davis said: "This day is dedicated by congress to the memorial services of the late president of the United States, James A. Garfield. I present you Hon. James G. Blaine, who has been fitly chosen for this historical occasion."

Blaine then rose and standing at the clerk's desk, immediately in front of the two presiding officers proceeded with impressiveness of manner and clearness of tone to deliver his eulogy from manuscript, as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: For the second time in this generation the great departments of the government of the United States are assembled in the hall of representatives to do honor to the memory of a murdered president. Lincoln fell at the close of a mighty struggle in which the passions of men had been deeply stirred. The tragical termination of his great life added but another to the long and solemn procession of horrors which has marked too many mortals with the blood of the first born. Garfield was slain in a day of peace when brother had been reconciled to brother and when anger and hate had been banished from the land. Whoever shall hereafter draw the portrait of murder, if he will show as it has been exhibited where such example was last to have been looked for, let him not give the grim visage of Moloch the brow knitted by revenge, the face black with settled hate, let him draw rather a decorous, smooth faced bloodless demon, not so much an example of human nature in its depravity and in its paroxysms of crime as an infernal being, a fiend in the ordinary display and development of his character.

HIS ANCESTORS

Upon the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth on the inspiring ground Charles Garfield two thousand emigrants came from old England to New England. They came in pursuit of the religious freedom and each pursued the tenor of his way independently and with honor and profit. The contest for religious liberty began in earnest at home. The man who struck the most effective blow for freedom by settling in the colonies in 1620 would have refused to submit to tyranny even from the Grand Monarch. General Garfield delighted to dwell on these traits and during his visit to England busied himself in discovering every trace of his forefathers in the parish register and on the ancient army rolls.

Sitting with a friend in the gallery of the house of commons one night after a long day's labor in the field of research he said with evident elation: "In every war in which for three centuries patriots of English blood have struck a sturdy blow for constitutional government and human liberty, his family had been represented." They were at Marston Moor, at Naseby and Preston; they were at Bunker Hill and Saratoga and Monmouth and in his own person he had bared for the same great cause in the war which preserved the union of the states.

After 1640 the opportunity had then come on the soil of England for that great contest which established the authority of parliament, gave religious freedom to the people, sent Charles to the block and committed to the hands of Oliver Cromwell the supreme executive authority of England.

English emigration was then renewed and from these 20,000 men with a small emigration from Scotland and from France descended the numbers who have New England blood in their veins.

In 1685 the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis Fourteenth scattered 400,000 Protestants who were among the most intelligent and enterprising of French subjects, merchants of capital, skilled mechanics and handicraftsmen superior at the time in Europe. A considerable number of these Huguenot French came to America. A few landed in New England and became honorably prominent in history. Their names have become Anglicized or have disappeared but their blood is traceable in many of the most reputable families and their names are perpetuated in honorable memorials and useful institutions.

From these two sources the English Puritans and the French Huguenot, he came, his father Abraham Garfield, being descended from the one and his mother Eliza Ballou from the other. It was good stock on both sides, none better, none truer, there was in it an inheritance of courage of manliness of imperishable love of liberty of unbending adherence to principle. Garfield was proud of his blood with as much satisfaction as if he were a British nobleman reading his stately pedigree in Burke's Peerage. He spoke of him as a man in descent from those who would not endure the oppression of the Stuarts and scorned in descent from the brave French Protestants.

HIS CHILDHOOD

Long his father before he was two years old the early life of Garfield was one of privation. But its poverty has been made labored unduly and unjustly prominent. Thousands of readers have imagined him as the ragged, starving child who (reality too often) meets the eye in all sections of our land. Unless General Garfield's infancy and youth had none of their destitution none of their painful future appealing to the tender heart and hand of charity. He was in the same sense in which Henry Clay was a poor boy, in which Andrew Jackson was a poor boy, in the same sense in which a large majority of the eminent men of America in all generations have been poor boys. Before a great multitude of men in a public speech Mr. Webster bore this testimony:

"I did not happen to be born in a log cabin, but my elder brothers and sisters were born in a log cabin, mid the snow drifts of New Hampshire at a period so early that when smoke rose first from the crude chimney and curled over the hills there was no similar evidence of a white man's habitation between it and the settlements on the rivers of Canada. Its stumps still exist. I make it an almost vis it. I carry my children to it to teach them the hardships endured by the generations which have gone before them. I love to dwell on the tender recollections, the early affections of the touching narratives and incidents which mingle with all I know of this primitive family abode."

With the requisite change of scene, the same words would aptly apply to the early days of Garfield. The poverty of the frontier, where all are engaged in a common struggle and where a common sympathy and co-operation lighten the burdens of each, is a very different poverty, different in kind, different in influence and effect, from that conscious and humiliating indigence which is every day forced to contrast itself with neighboring wealth, on which it feels a sense of dependence. The poverty of the frontier is indeed no poverty, it is the beginning of wealth and has the boundless possibility of the future always opening before it. No man ever grew up in the agricultural regions of the west where a house raising is a matter of common interest and helpfulness with any other feeling than that of broad minded generous independence. This honorable independence marked the youth of Garfield as of millions of the best blood and brain now training for the future citizenship and future government of the republic. Garfield was born heir to land to the title of freeholder which has been the patent and passport of self respect with the Anglo-Saxon race since Hengist and Horsa landed on the shores of England. The venture on the canal was an alternative between that and the deck of a Lake Erie schooner and was a far better device for earning money, just as the New England boy begins a possibly great career by sailing before the mast on a coast vessel. No [illegible] of anything of shame to early struggles with adverse circumstances, and no man feels a worthier pride when he has conquered an obstacle to his progress, but no one of noble mind desires to be looked on as having occupied a menial position as having been repressed by a feeling of inferiority or as having suffered the evils of poverty till relief was found at hand charity. Garfield's youth presented no hardships which energy did not overcome subjected him to no privations which he did not cheerfully accept, and left no memories save those which were recalled with delight and transmitted with profit and pride.

EDUCATION

Garfield's early opportunities for securing an education were extremely limited, and yet were sufficient to develope in him a [illegible] he learn. He could read at home and each winter had the advantage of district schools and of all the books he found in the check of his acquaintance. Some he got by heart while yet in childhood. He was a constant student of the Bible and became familiar with its literature. The dignity and [illegible] of his speech in his mature life gave evidence of this early training. At eighteen year of age he was able to teach school and thenceforth his ambition was to obtain a college education. To this end he bent all his efforts, working in the harvest field at the carpenter's bench and in the winter season teaching the common schools of the neighborhood. While thus laboriously occupied he found time to prosecute his studies and was so successful that at twenty two he was able to enter the junior class at Williams College, then under the presidency of the venerable and honored Mark Hopkins, who in the fullness of his powers survived the eminent pupil to whom he was of such noble service.

The history of Garfield's life to this period presents no new feature. He had undoubtedly shown perseverance, reliance, energy, decision and ambition, qualities which, be it said, for the honor of our country are everywhere to be found among the young men of America. But from his graduation at Williams onward to the hour of his tragical death Garfield's career was eminent and exceptional. Slowly working, through his educational period, receiving his diploma when twenty four years of age, he seemed at once bound to spring into conspicuous and brilliant success. Within six years he was successively president of a college, state senator of Ohio, major general of the army of the United States and representative in the national congress, a combination of honors so rarely, so elevated in a period so brief and to a man so young, is without precedent or parallel in the history of the country.

EARLY CAREER

Garfield's army life was begun with no other military knowledge than such as he had hastily gained from books in the few months preceding his march to the field. Stepping from civil life to the head of a regiment the first order he received was to assume command of a brigade and to operate with an independent force in eastern Kentucky. His immediate duty was to check the advance of Humphrey Marshall who was marching down the Big Sandy with the purpose of commanding in connection with other confederate forces the entire territory of Kentucky, and of precipitating the state into secession. This was at the close of 1861. Seldom if ever has a young college professor been thrown into a more embarrassing and discouraging position. He knew just enough of military science, as he expressed it himself, to measure the extent of his ignorance and with a handful of men he was marching in rough winter weather [illegible] country among a hostile population to confront a largely superior force under the command of a distinguished graduate of West Point who had seen active and important service in two preceding wars. The result of the campaign is matter of history. Also skill the endurance and extraordinary energy shown by Garfield, the courage he imparted to his men, raw and untrained as himself, the measures he adopted to increase his force and to create in the enemy's mind exaggerated estimate of his numbers bore perfect fruit in the routing of Marshall, the capture of his camp, the dispersion of his forces and the seizing of an important ferry from the control of the rebellion. Coming at the close of a long series of disasters to the union army Garfield's victory had an unusual and extraneous importance and in the popular judgment, elevated the young commander to the rank of a military hero. With less than two thousand men in his entire command he had met an army of 5000 and defeated them, driving Marshall's forces successfully from two strongholds of their own selection, furnished with abundant artillery. Gen. Buell, commanding the department of Ohio, an experienced and able soldier, published an order of thanks and congratulations on the brilliant result of the Big Sandy campaign, which would have turned the head of a less sensible man than Garfield. Buell declared his services had called into action the highest qualities of a soldier, and President Lincoln supplemented these words of praise by the more substantial reward of a brigadier general's commission to bear date from the day of this decisive victory over Marshall.

The subsequent military career of Garfield fully sustained its brilliant beginning. With his new commission he was assigned to the command a brigade in the army of the Ohio and took part in the second and decisive day's battle at Shiloh. The remainder of the year 1862 was not especially eventful to Garfield, as it was not to the armies in which he was serving. His practical sense was called into exercise by General Buell of reconstructing the brigades and re-establishing the lines of railway communication for the army. His occupation in this useful but not brilliant field was varied by service on courts martial of importance, in which department of duty he won a valuable reputation attracting the notice and gaining the approval of the able and eminent judge advocate general of the army. That of itself was a warrant to honorable fame, for among the great men who in those trying days gave themselves with entire devotion to the service of their country, one who brought to that service the ripest learning, the most varied attainments, who in the day of triumph sat reserved and silent, was Joseph Holt, of Kentucky, who in his retirement enjoys the respect and veneration of all who love the union of states.

Early in 1863 Garfield was assigned to the highly important and responsible post of chief of staff to General Rosecrans, when at the head of the army of the Cumberland. Perhaps in a great military campaign no subordinate office requires sounder judgment and quicker knowledge of men than the chief of staff to the commanding general. An indiscreet man in such a position can sow more discord, breed more jealousy and disseminate more strife than any other officer in the army. When Garfield assumed his new duties he found various troubles already developed and seriously affecting the value and efficiency of the army of the Cumberland. The energy, the impartiality and the tact with which he sought to allay these dissensions and discharge the duties of his new and trying position will always remain one of the most striking proofs of his great versatility. His military duties closed on the memorable field of Chickamauga a field which however disastrous to the Union army gave to him the occasion of winning imperishable laurels. The very rarest distinction was accorded him of great promotion for his bravery on a field that was lost. President Lincoln appointed him major general in the army of the United States for his gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle and the army of the Cumberland was reorganized under the command of Gen. Thomas who promptly offered General Garfield the command of his division. He was eminently deserving to accept the position, but [illegible] was unprepared by the fact he had a year before been elected to congress to tell then what he must take his seat, drawing near. He preferred to remain in military service and had written in his own brave, large character of success in the wider field which his new rank opened to him. Balancing the arguments on the one side and the other, anxious to determine what was for the best desirous above all things to do his patriotic duty, he was influenced by the advice of President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton both of whom assured him that he could at that time be of especial value in the house of representatives. He therefore received his commission of major general on the fifth day of December 1863 and took his seat in the house of representatives on the 9th. He had served [illegible] years and four months in the army and had just completed his thirty second year.

His military life illustrated by honorable performances and such promise was as he himself felt peculiarly fortunate and of necessity incomplete. Speculation as to what he might have done in a field where the great prizes are so few, cannot be profitable. It is sufficient to say that he considered he did his duty bravely and faithfully, entitled to be won in enviable fame and honored from the service without a foot against him.

The 38th congress is frequently entitled in history to the distinction of the War Congress. It was certainly the war session. Every member was chosen on the issues involved in the continuance of the struggle. The 37th congress had indeed legislated to a large extent on war measures but it was chosen before any one believed that secession of the states would be actually attempted. The magnitude of the work which fell on its successor was unprecedented both in respect to the vast sum of money raised for the support of the army and navy and of the new and extraordinary powers of legislation which it was forced to exercise. Only twenty four states were represented and 183 members were upon its roll. Among the seven hundred and odd party leaders on both sides, which members with established reputations for ability and with that skill which comes only from parliamentary experience. Of the 183 members elected to that congress Thomas Whitely Joshua R. Giddings and James A. Garfield represented the district for fifteen years. There is no test of capacity in any department of public life more severe than service in the house of representatives. Nowhere else is so little deference paid to reputation previously acquired to eminence won outside, no place where so little consideration is shown for the feeling or failures of beginners. What a man runs in the house he runs in the face of his own character and if he loses and falls back he must expect no mercy and will receive no sympathy. It is a field in which the survival of the strongest is emphatically true and where no pretense can be derived and no glamour encountered. There what is discovered is worth is impartially weighed, its rank is irrevocably decided. With possibly a single exception Garfield was the youngest member in the house when he entered and was but seventeen years from his college graduation. Yet he had not been in his seat sixty days before his ability was recognized and his place conceded. He expected to the front with the confidence of a man who belonged there. The house was crowded with strong men of both parties, many of them have since been transferred to the senate and many of them have served with distinction in the cabinets of their respective states and foreign missions of great consequence but among all none grew so rapidly none so firmly as Garfield. Garfield succeeded because all the world in concert could not have kept him in the background and because when once in the front he played his part with a prompt intrepidity and a commanding cast that were the outward symptoms of the immense reserves of energy of which it was in his power to draw. Indeed the apparent reserved force which Garfield possessed was one of his great characteristics. He never did so well but that it seemed he could easily have done better. He never expended so much strength but that he seemed to be holding additional power at his call. This is one of the happiest and rarest distinctions of an effective leader and often counts for as much in persuading an assembly as the eloquent and elaborate argument which distinguished his service in the house of representatives.

THE LAWYER

As a lawyer, though admirably equipped for the profession, he can scarcely be said to have entered in its practice. His efforts made at the bar were distinguished by the same order of talent which he exhibited on every field in which he was put to the test, and if a man may be accepted as a competent judge of his own capacities and adaptation the law is the profession to which Garfield should have devoted himself, but fate ordained otherwise, and the republican party will rest largely on his service in the house of representatives. That service was exceptionally long, he was nine times consecutively congressman to the house an honor enjoyed by not more than six other republicans of more than 1,000 who have been elected from the organization of the government to this hour.

AS A PARLIAMENTARY ORATOR.

As a parliamentary orator, as a debater on issues equally joined, where the position had been chosen and the ground laid out, Garfield must be assigned a very high rank, more so, perhaps, than any man with whom he associated in public life. He gave careful and systematic study to public questions and he came to every discussion in which he took part with elaborate and complete preparation. He was a steady and indefatigable worker. Those who imagine that talents or genius can supply the place or achieve the results of labor will find no encouragement in Garfield's life. In preliminary work he was apt, rapid, skillful. He possessed in a high degree the power of readily absorbing ideas and facts, and like Dr. Johnson, had the art of getting from a book all that was of value in it by reading apparently so quick and cursory that it seemed like a mere glance at the table of contents. He was preeminently a fair and candid man in debate, and took no petty advantage, stooped to no unworthy methods, avoided personal altercations, rarely appealed to prejudice, didn't seek to inflame passion. He had a quicker eye for the strong point of his adversary than for the weak point, and on his own side he so marshalled his mighty arguments as to make his hearers forget any possible lack in the complete strength of his position. He had a habit of stating his opponent's side with such amplitude of fairness and such liberality of concession that his followers often complained that he was giving his case away, but never in his prolonged participation in the proceedings in the house did he give his case away or fail in the judgement of [illegible] and impartial listeners to gain a [illegible] Those characteristics which marked him as a great parliamentary leader were [illegible] in his power of statement in his sublime analysis and logic and his love of literature. In his wealth and world of illustration (he is not once) reminded of that great English statesman of to-day, who confronted obstacles that would daunt any but one so dauntless, rejected by those who supported the rights he is forced to invade, still labors with serene courage for the amelioration of Ireland and for the honor of the English name.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Garfield's nomination to the presidency, while not predicted or anticipated was not a surprise to the country. His prominence in congress, his solid qualities, his wide reputation strengthened by his then recent election as senator from Ohio, kept him in the public eye, a man occupying the very highest rank among those entitled to be called statesmen. It was not mere chance that brought him this high honor. We must, says Mr. Emerson, reckon success a constitutional trait. It follows in robust health and has shipwreck and is at the top of his condition and thirty years old at his departure from Concord, he will steer well and his ship will reach Newfoundland, take out Erie and put in a stronger and bolder man and the ship will sail six hundred or one thousand or fifteen hundred miles further and reach Labrador and New England. There is no chance in mere luck.

As a candidate Garfield steadily grew in popular favor. He was met with a storm of detraction at the very hour of his nomination and it continued with increasing volume and no abatement until the close of his victorious campaign. No malice, no greatness in morals can be sure to escape from the back wounds of calumny. It strikes the whitest virtue. "What king so strong can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?" Under it all he was calm and strong and confident, never lost his self possession did by unwise act, spoke no hasty or ill considered word. Indeed nothing in his whole life is more remarkable or more creditable than his bearing through those five full months of stop action—a prolonged agony of trial to a sensitive man a constant, cruel drift on the powers of moral endurance. In a great mass of these unjust imputations was not answered and with the general debris of the campaign fell into oblivion but in a few instances the iron entered his soul and he died with the injury not unforgiven, if unforgiven.

One aspect of Garfield's candidacy was unprecedented. Never before in the history of American contests in this country had the successful presidential candidate spoken freely on passing events and current issues. For a candidate to attempt anything of this kind, seemed novel rash and even desperate. The old class of voters recalled the unfortunate Abbotsford letter in which Clay was supposed to have signed his political death warrant. They remembered also the hot tempered effusion by which General Scott lost a large share of popularity before he was nominated, and the unfortunate speeches which rapidly consumed the remainder. The younger voters had seen Mr. Greeley for years of vigorous and original addresses preparing for his own defeat. Unmindful of these warnings, unheeding the advice of friends, Garfield spoke to large crowds as he journeyed to and from New York in August. To a great multitude in that city to delegations of every kind that called at Mentor during the summer watchful and eager to catch a phrase that might be turned to odium or ridicule, or a sentence that might be distorted to his own or to his party's injury, Garfield did not trip or halt in any one of his seventy speeches. This seems all the more remarkable when it is remembered that he did not write what he said, and yet spoke with such logical consecutiveness of thought, and such admirable precision of phrase as to defy accidents of misreport or misrepresentation.

PRESIDENTIAL LIFE

In the beginning of his presidential life Garfield's experience did not yield him pleasure or satisfaction. The duties that engrossed a large portion of a president's time were distasteful to him, and were unfavorably contrasted with his legislative work. "I have been delaying all these years with ideas," he impatiently exclaimed one day, "and here I am dealing only with persons. I have been heretofore treating of the fundamental principles of government, and here I am considering all day whether A or B shall be appointed to this or that office." He was earnestly seeking some practical way of correcting the evils arising from distribution of ever grown and unwieldy patronage, evils always appreciated and often discussed by him, but whose magnitude had been more deeply impressed upon his mind since his accession to the presidency. Had he lived he would have made comprehensive improvements in the mode of appointments and in the tenure of office, which would have been proposed by him and with the aid of congress would no doubt have been perfected, but while many merely involved consequences personal to himself, the pride of consistency or any supposed sense of humiliation that might result from correcting his position had not a feather's weight with him. No man was less subject to such influence from within or without after most anxious deliberation and survey of all the circumstances. He solemnly believed that the true prerogatives of the executive were involved in the issue which had been raised, and that he would be unfaithful to his supreme obligation if he failed to maintain in their vigor the constitutional rights and dignities of the great office. He believed this in all conviction of conscience when in sound health and he believed it in his suffering and prostration, in the last conscious thought which his weary mind bestowed on the transitory struggles of life. More than this need not be said. Less than this could not be said. In justice to the dead the highest obligation that devolves upon the living demands the declaration that in all the bearings of the subject, certain or possible, the president was content in his mind, justified in conscience, immovable in his conclusions. If his executive duties were not grateful to him he was assiduous and conscientious in their discharge. From the very outset he exhibited administrative talent of a high order, he grasped the helm of office with the hand of a master. In this respect, indeed, he constantly surprised many who were not most intimately associated with him in the government and especially those who feared he might be lacking in the executive faculty. His disposition of business was orderly and rapid. His power of analysis and his skill in classification enabled him to dispatch a vast mass of detail with singular promptness and ease. His cabinet meetings were admirable conducted. His clear presentation of official subjects, his well considered suggestions of topics on which discussion was [illegible]

President Arthur has already made five hundred appointments since he went into office, or about one hundred each month on an average. Considering the petitions and personal influence used in behalf of almost all of these candidates, the president has shown considerable industry.

Special dispatches to the Denver Republican, which we prior this morning, indicate that Sheriff Smith has the inside track for the marshalship, and possibly this issue may contain the certain news of his appointment. This will be exceedingly gratifying to the republicans not only of this county, but of southern Colorado.

The meeting last night for the organization of an athletic club was a decided success as it deserved to be. There are a large number of young men in our stores, banks and railroad offices who require the exercise and recreation which such an organization can afford. It will be a blessing physically and morally. We trust that the gentlemen who shall seek further subscriptions will be generously received by our citizens.

If Mr. Conkling accepts the justiceship the half-breeds will have the opportunity of demonstrating how easy it is to carry New York for the republicans without the assistance of the great resignationist.—[Republic.

The half breeds demonstrated it last fall when Mr. Conkling was so seriously indisposed as not to be able to take any active part in the campaign. It is about time for the idea that Mr. Conkling carries New York in his breeches pocket to die out. The legislature and then the party in its caucuses repudiated him last year. He is still a strong politician but not an all powerful one.

The report of the Hon. James G. Blaine's speech came in very bad shape yesterday, and we present it in its connected shape only by the exercise of considerable ingenuity. Apparently the sheets had all been well shuffled before sending. It was probably caused by the fact that it was transmitted four times before reaching us, and in some cases on three and four different wires. The report was handled with great skill and promptness in this city by Mr. E. H. Betts, the night operator. He received most of the report at a single sitting, without any relief. At Pueblo the report was taken by several operators, who relieved each other hourly. Mr. Betts is one of the best operators in the state for handling press report and deserves great credit for his splendid work yesterday.

THE MEMORIAL ADDRESS

We publish in full the address as delivered by Mr. Blaine before the two houses of congress yesterday. It was an occasion worthy of the priceless services of the patriot whose virtues were extolled, worthy of the distinguished company which was assembled, and worthy of the brilliant statesman who delivered the address. Once before in our nation's history has there been a similar occasion. Sixteen years ago, in February, 1866, the greatest student of American history in the presence of an equally distinguished assembly delivered a memorial address on the life and character of the martyred Lincoln. It was at the close of the war when the strong passions which it had aroused were unallayed, and the sorrow which its final tragedy had caused, was still poignant. But then ten months had elapsed since Lincoln left us while scarcely five months have passed since the sad services at Cleveland. Then George Bancroft was selected for the orator, a man of high literary attainments, a student in the broadest sense of American institutions, who grasped in all its fullness the most important period of our nation's history, in which Lincoln was the prominent figure. The address was a calm estimate of the life and services of this great figure in history by our most philosophic historian. It was just, large, and appreciative. This time a personal friend, an active politician who had also been an active participant in the congressional struggles by which Garfield will be remembered, was selected to deliver the memorial address of necessity it differs in character. While Bancroft's was the more scholarly, Blaine's has greater warmth. The affection which he felt for his cherished friend is breathed throughout the address. Bancroft's philosophical methods led him to dwell largely on the period in which Lincoln was an actor. Blaine thought only of the man in whose memory he was speaking. The one was the address of the calm student, the other of the warm political friend.

Great expectations were entertained of this address, and we think they are fulfilled. It was not expected that Mr. Blaine would rise to the elevated thought of Webster, the chaste diction of Everett, or the moral dignity of Garfield. But his well-known personal relations to Garfield, his command of forcible English, and his enthusiastic nature led the discriminating to expect just such an address as Mr. Blaine delivered. No other person at this time could have delivered an address of so much temporary interest and value. The time has not come for a cold estimate of Garfield's career. We wanted the love, friendship and sorrow which are all blended in the words of yesterday.

It was said in September last that the time had not yet come to place Garfield his place in history. It is equally true now. But Mr. Blaine has shown great and conservative discrimination in his estimate of Garfield. He attributes no virtues to him that have not been universally accorded to him. He places his services scarcely higher than posterity will. He gives him, in fact, no prominent position except as a parliamentary debater and this prominent position posterity must recognize. In the period when our constitution was formed and adopted no one man stands out above his associates unless we may name Madison. In the period of forty years before the late war the great questions discussed were those relating to the interpretation of the constitution and the theory of government. Here Webster stands forth without a peer and has justly been styled the expounder of the constitution. In a third period when the necessities of the war and the results it achieved demanded changes in our organic laws and special legislation of vast importance, Garfield must be recognized as the master hand in shaping this legislation. He had the soundest brain, the largest views of any of his associates. Unlike Sumner he never favored or pressed a measure until the time was ripe for its adoption. Unlike Stevens, his party zeal never ran away with his judgment so that he confounded the good of his party with the good of his country, unlike Trumbull, he saw more in reconstruction than legal technicalities and unlike Sherman, he never faltered in his allegiance to honest money and honest fulfilment of our obligations. As we look back on the career of Garfield, it is difficult to see how, with the light he had at the end of his congressional career he could have changed materially a speech or changed a vote during his seventeen years service in the house. The local influences, the temporary pressure, so strong and overpowering at the time, never clouded his clear brain or weakened his loyalty to right. This made his services inestimable. This made his influence so strong, so wise, and so beneficent in this period of constitutional reform, a period requiring more comprehensive qualities of statesmanship than any in our history since the formation of the constitution. In this period Mr. Garfield deserves the highest place as an originator and advocate of the post bellum legislation.

Punch proposes that the picture should be translated "this shut up" and adds that it will be known as the latest early closing movement.

President Arthur has rented the cottage on Cedar avenue, Long Branch opposite the lodge of Hollywood Park. The cottage is nearly completed.

The late Paris exposition lost 31,000,000 francs. The Philadelphia Centennial exposition cleared $2,500,000. This is one of the things they don't do better in France.

The Duke of Hamilton is going to sell not only his magnificent library but the notable collection of pictures, statues and decorative furniture of Hamilton palace.

More than half of the institutions in the United States which profess to give university education and confer degrees now admit women on equal terms with male students.

Mr. Herbert Spencer will come to America in August for a three months tour. He will visit Canada and California. He has refused all proposal to lecture his object being to see the country.

A monument to the reformer Zwingli is to be erected at Zurich, and sculptors of all countries are invited to send in designs. The competition will remain open until June 1. The cost is limited to 80,000 francs.

Overheard in the boxes of the French chamber of deputies during the debate on the division. (The speaker is a lady with a sweet face and an even sweeter bonnet.) "This is not at all amusing, ma chere. At what time will they begin to insult each other?"

An exhibition of M. Meissonier's works will be held in Paris during the coming spring at the rooms of the Societe des Aquarellistes, near the Madeleine. The artist will superintend the arrangement of the collection which will be made as complete as possible.

There is still living in Prussia a lady who, in her youth, was on terms of friendly and intimate relationship with Goethe. She is now the Baroness Ulrike von Lowitzoff, her age is nearly ninety, and her home is at the Castle of Tezilitz, in Lobositz, where she lives in great retirement.

Mlle. Dasne has given to the Louvre the collection of M. Thiers on condition that they be shown in a special hall by themselves. They comprise few paintings, but many fine bronzes, terra-cottas, lacquers, water colors and the like. The preparation of a suitable room at the Louvre has been begun.

Mme. Celeste, who has just died in Paris was an actress who came over in the early American days, when pretty actresses with a European reputation were solemnly introduced to the cabinet by the president. Jackson did it in her case. Celeste made $250,000 on that trip (the second to America), and she knew how to keep it.

Joseph E. Sheffield will give the Sheffield Scientific school his mansion and fine grounds after the death of his wife and one son, also one-seventh of his entire property, which is estimated to be worth from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000. To the Berkley Divinity school, in Middletown, he gave $100,000. His widow and six children receive six-sevenths of the remaining property.

Mexican Confidence in American Enterprise

CITY OF MEXICO, February 25.—The Diario, the official government organ, on account of the sinister reports published in northern papers regarding Mexican enterprise, expresses confidence in the railway future, and says: "An excursion of cabinet ministers over the completed sections of the National railway produces confidence in this American enterprise in Mexico."

BLAINE'S EULOGY.

invited, his quick decision when all had been heard, combined to show a thoroughness of mental training as rare as his natural ability and his facile adaptation to a new and enlarged field of labor. With perfect comprehension of all the importance of the war, with a cool calculation of the obstacles in his way impelled always by a generous enthusiasm Garfield conceived that much might be done by speeches at the Yorktown celebration, at the cotton exposition at Atlanta and the meeting of the army of the Cumberland at Chattanooga. He was already turning over in his mind his address for each occasion, and the three gave him the exact scope and verge he needed. At Yorktown he would have before him the associations of the hundred years that bound the south and north in the sacred memory of a common danger and a common victory. At Atlanta he would present the material interests and industrial development which appealed to the thrift and independence of every household, and which should unite the two sections by the instinct of self interest. At Chattanooga he would revive memories of the war, only to show that after all its disasters and its suffering the country was stronger and greater, the union rendered indissoluble and the future made brighter and better for all. Garfield's ambition for the success of his administration was high. With strong caution and conservatism in his nature he was in no danger of attempting rash experiments or of resorting to empiricism of statesmanship but he believed that renewed and close attention should be given to questions affecting material interests and commercial prospects of fifty millions of people. He believed our continental relations extensive and developed as they are involved responsibility and could be cultivated in profitable friendship or be abandoned to harmful indifference or hasting enmity. He believed with equal confidence the essential forerunner to a new era of national progress must be a feeling of contentment in every section of the union and a general belief that the benefits and burdens of the government would be common to all. Himself a conspicuous illustration of what ability and ambition may do under republican institutions he loved his country with a passion of patriotic devotion and every waking thought was given to her advancement. He was an American in all his aspirations and he looked to the destiny and influence of the United States with the philosophic composure of Jefferson and the demonstrative confidence of John Adams. The political events which disturbed the president's serenity for many weeks before that fateful day of July form an important chapter in his career, and in his own judgment involved matters of principle and which are vitally essential to the constitutional administration of the federal government. It would be out of place here and now to spell language of controversy but the events referred to however they may continue to be a source of contention with others have become so far as Garfield is concerned as much a matter of history as his heroic act at Chickamauga or his illustrious service in the house. Detail is not needed and personal antagonism shall not be rekindled by any word uttered to-day. The motives of those opposing him are not to be here adversely interpreted nor their course harshly characterized. But of the dead president this is to be said and said of his own speech forever silenced and he can be no more heard except through the fidelity and love of surviving friends. From beginning to end of the controversy so much deplored the president was never for a moment actuated by motives of pique to himself or loss to others least of all did he harbor revenge. Rarely did he ever show resentment, and malice was not in his nature. He was congenially employed only in the exchange of good offices and the doing of kindly deeds. There was not an hour from the beginning of the trouble until the fatal shot had entered his bed when the president would not gladly for the sake of restoring harmony have retraced any step he had taken if such retracing had not been the sacrifice of what he thought to be a vital principle affecting the fundamental relations between the executive and legislative departments of the government.

GARFIELD'S RELIGION

The religious element in Garfield's character was deep and earnest. In youth he espoused the faith of the Disciples, a sect of that great Baptist communion which in different ecclesiastic establishments are so numerous and influential throughout all parts of the United States but the broadening tendency of his mind and his active spirit of inquiry, were at variance and carried him beyond the dogmas of the sect and the restraint of association. In selecting a college in which to continue his education he rejected Bethany, though presided over by Alexander Campbell, the greatest preacher of his church. His reasons were characteristic. First, that Bethany leaned too heavily toward slavery, and second, that being himself a Disciple and the son of a Disciple, he had little acquaintance with the people of other beliefs and thought it would be more liberal (quoting his own words) both in his religious and general views to go into a new circle and be under new influences. The liberal views which he anticipated as the result of wider culture were fully realized. He was emancipated from mere sectarian belief, and with eager interest pushed his investigations in the direction of modern progressive thought. He followed with quickening steps in the paths of exploration and speculation so fearlessly trodden by Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall and by other leading scientists of the radical and advanced type. His own church binding its Disciples by no formulation of creed, but accepting the Old and New Testaments as the word of God with unbiased liberty of private interpretation favored, if it did not stimulate, the spirit of investigation.

THE GREAT TRAGEDY

His inauguration had been safely passed, he felt trouble lay behind him and not before him, that he was to meet the wife whom he loved and who was recovering from an illness which had but lately disquieted him and at times almost unnerved him, that he was going to his alma mater to renew the most cheerful associations of his young manhood and to exchange greetings with those whose deep interest had followed every step of his upward progress from the day he entered upon his college course until he had attained the loftiest gift of his countrymen. Surely if happiness can ever come from the honors or triumphs of this world, on that quiet July morning James A. Garfield may well have been a happy man. No foreboding of evil haunted him, not the slightest premonition of danger clouded his sky, his terrible fate was upon him in an instant, one moment he stood erect, strong, confident, the years stretching peacefully out before him, the next he lay wounded, bleeding, helpless doomed to weary weeks of torture, to silence and the grave. Great in life he was surpassingly great in death. For no cause, in the very frenzy of wantonness and wickedness, by the red hand of a murderer, he was thrust from the full tide of this world's interest, from its hopes, its aspirations, its victories, into the visible presence of death and he did not quail.

THE SUN'S COMMENTS

NEW YORK, February 27.—The Sun's editorial this morning says: James G. Blaine will deliver to the capitol at Washington an oration on the late President Garfield. He will have a distinguished audience and we hope will give them a good speech, but we fear Blaine is not the man to do full justice to such a subject. Of late we have had to say some very hard things about him, but to-day we will not dwell on these things. Blaine will not wish to dwell on them, and so let all others give their mind instead to thoughts and considerations which are more germain to the occasion. It is two years since the most potent elements in the republican party were arrayed in support of a conspiracy to make Grant president of the United States for a third term, a purpose which involved making him permanent ruler of the country. Many of the most eminent chiefs of that great and powerful party were devoted to this conspiracy. Many honest, upright and patriotic men had been led to give it their countenance and support, but in this great and critical emergency James G. Blaine stood like a rock against the noxious scheme. This is a fact that should ever be recorded to his honor, and we recall it with gratitude and admiration today.

OMAHA & DENVER SHORT LINE.

Its Convenience to Colorado Business Men.

Commencing Sunday, November 6, 1881, the Union Pacific company will run a fast Omaha express through between Denver and Omaha daily, over the recently constructed Julesburg cut-off.

Leaving Denver (breakfast)	8 00 a. m.
Arrive at Sterling (dinner)	1 30 p. m.
Arrive at North Platte	7 00 p. m.
Arrive at Omaha	7 00 a. m.
Arrive at Council Bluffs (breakfast)	8 00 a. m.
Arrive at Chicago (Chicago time)	8 30 a. m.

Time, Denver to Omaha, twenty three and one-half hours, time, Denver to Chicago, forty-six hours.

This new route is 180 miles shorter than any rival, six hours the quickest to Omaha, seven to fifteen hours the quickest to Chicago, St. Louis and all points east, and it runs the finest trains ever built constructed by the Pullman company expressly for this line. They embody every feature of safety, convenience and luxury yet attained in railway equipment. It is the only through line possessing a water grade across the plains (averaging less than ten feet to the mile). It is the most picturesque route for the best dining stations, the heaviest steel rails, best iron bridges and most careful ballasting.

Passengers from Leadville, Gunnison, San Juan and all points in southern Colorado make close connection in the Union depot, Denver, and arrive in Chicago and all eastern cities a day to have a full day for business on the day of arrival, practically saving from twelve to twenty-four hours, and avoiding all night changes.

Meantime the old Kansas Pacific route, now Kansas division Union Pacific railway, to Kansas City and all points east and southeast, and the Pioneer Union Pacific route from Denver, via Cheyenne, to Omaha and the east and northeast, maintain their usual standard of excellence. Tickets via Cheyenne are good over the new route, or vice versa. 1 23 tf

ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

A Well Attended and Enthusiastic Meeting at Court House Hall

In pursuance to call about sixty athletes assembled in Court House hall last night to take initial steps toward the organization of an athletic association Captain Wm H Tuttle called the meeting to order and stated the object for which he had been called He then read a petition containing eighty signatures of gentlemen who favored the advancement of the project and who were willing to contribute any reasonable amount toward its maintenance and support

Temporary organization was then called for which resulted in the unanimous election of Hon C J Parish president and W H Thornell secretary Upon taking the chair the president said that he was entirely ignorant as to any plans which might have been made regarding permanent organization There were others present he said who have had the matter under consideration and he would suggest that they give us some idea as to the proper mode of procedure A call was made for some one who had belonged to an organization similar to the one proposed Mr Thornell made reference to the Manhattan athletic club of New York and suggested something similar but less costly be started A well equipped gymnasium and grounds for outdoor sports such as cricket lawn tennis base ball running croquet etc is what is needed said Mr Thornell

The chairman thought that the question of most vital importance was the probable cost of erecting equipping and maintaining a gymnasium and asked whether any one present had made an estimate In response Captain Tuttle said that he had made some few inquiries from which he had concluded that a suitable building say 40x60 in size would cost about $1 00 In addition to this would be the equipments which could be procured for $300 As for the keeping up of the rooms he said that was an after consideration and could be provided for by the payment of dues On the motion of Mr Keating the chair was authorized to appoint a committee consisting of three to procure estimates and take such other steps as is necessary and report at the next meeting

As this committee Mr Parrish appointed Dr Bunnan W R Thornell and Captain W H Tuttle After planning the committee the chairman said that he thought it would be well to give the gentlemen composing the committee some ideas as to what would be required of them following which a general discussion took place

Dr Bunnan suggested that a subscription list be started in order to show that those present were willing to contribute their share toward the support of the project He proposed that the sum be placed at five dollars each and he launched the list by subscribing for five shares

The doctor's proposition seemed to meet with approval and a motion in its support was seconded and adopted A list was opened and circulated among those present and the gratifying result was that seventy seven shares amounting to nearly $400 were subscribed for

The meeting then adjourned subject to the call of the chair

It will thus be seen that the organization starts out under the most favorable circumstances and is evidently an assured success Within the next few days the committee having the matter in charge will call upon our citizens for subscriptions to the project the necessity and importance of which is very apparent and the fact that it is supported by many of our leading citizens should insure for it the most liberal aid

The Marshalship Practically Disposed of

Special dispatch to the Denver Republican

WASHINGTON, February 25—The following is the substance of the attorney general's letter to Senator Teller

"I find sufficient reason in the pronounced opposition of the two judges to the reappointment of Mr Wilcox The court should always give its confidence to its subordinate officers or the usefulness of those officers is destroyed When the judges of the court of the United States express their disapprobation of a person who is to act as their marshal, and urge in positive and emphatic tones that he must not be appointed, that of itself will be a sufficient reason to create serious doubts as to the fitness of the person proposed. Of course judges cannot control the appointment as is to be seen from the cases but they must be consulted by the appointing power when they are made In view of this I ask you to have Mr Wilcox withdrawn, for I will decline to recommend his appointment and ask to be withdrawn because of your zeal in his behalf, and because I desire to do all in my power to carry your wishes with respect In conclusion I request that you will suggest the name of some suitable person to be appointed at your instance

I am respectfully yours truly,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER

It is again rumored that a large brick block will be erected on the corner of Tejon and Huerfano streets at an early day.

Mr E. W. Giddings, of Messrs Giddings & Stillman, left for the east yesterday afternoon, to lay in a stock of spring and summer goods.

A Yale banquet will begin at the St James hotel, Denver, on Saturday night, in which some of the resident graduates here will participate.

Mr Ed Lansing, of Albany, New York who has been visiting his brother Charles A Lansing of this city left for his home Sunday afternoon.

There was considerable excitement in the city yesterday over the report printed in the Denver Republican that Sheriff Smith had the race for the marshalship.

Remember the performance of "Esmeralda" at the Opera House on Thursday night and secure your seats early for in all probability there will be a rush.

Water was turned on in the street fountains yesterday for the first time in some weeks. If the weather continues as warm as it is now they will be kept running.

Messrs Hammond and Harlow left yesterday by their own conveyance for Kerber creek. It is the first prospecting outfit that has started out this season.

Mr Thomas McLaughlin, who for the past two years has been assistant baggageman at the depot, left yesterday for Pueblo where he will embark in business for himself.

Messrs Rose & Burnham began yesterday to make some extensive improvements in the City Drug store. The interior will be remodeled and handsomely papered and the exterior will be repainted.

Manager Nye of the opera house, has appointed Charles Wells of the auditors office of the Denver & Rio Grande. Mr Wells will no doubt make a popular and suitable man for the position.

Mr Bertie Stoter, who has been attending the college of pharmacy in Philadelphia during the past winter, returned to his home here on Sunday night. He can be found at his accustomed place in Sagendorf & Co's drug store.

Sergeant J. V. Brown of the signal service, who was stationed on Pike's Peak in 1874, is in the city. He retired from the service some time ago and is now a clerk in the quartermaster's department of the U. S. A. at Helena, Montana.

The magic lantern exposition and lecture by Dr Hays at the Presbyterian church to-night promises to be instructive and entertaining. Dr. Hays who was president of Washington and Jefferson college, Pennsylvania, before coming to Colorado, has an enviable reputation as a lecturer and has great experience in the use of the stereopticon. He will exhibit views of Colorado, Europe and Bible scenery, customs, habits, etc., and zoology, geology and botany, besides a number of comic ones. The entertainment will begin at 7 30 o'clock. Tickets are for sale at Howbert Bros.' and Eoff & Howbert's. Prices of admission twenty-five and fifteen cents.

In a letter written to Manager Nye yesterday Mr Ed J. Maxwell manager of the Pueblo Philharmonic Society says that the society will come to Colorado Springs in a special car and will be accompanied by many of the leading citizens of Pueblo. Mr Maxwell especially requests that those of our citizens contemplating attending the production of 'Esmeralda' come as early as possible as the curtain will be rung up promptly at eight o'clock. This favor is asked out of necessity as the society has to return to Pueblo at eleven o'clock the same night. The time of play is about three hours and it will thus be seen there is but little time to spare.

Several days ago the sample room at the Crawford hotel was broken into and three eleven pairs of trousers were stolen from Mr McIntyre a salesman representing Mr [illegible] & Co of Chicago. He recovered [illegible] of the [illegible] but [illegible] refused to say anything in regard to the matter.

The Denver papers are weighing the necessity of organizing a base ball nine in that city which can during the coming season stand some show with the Colorado Springs champions. Nothing would [illegible] the [illegible] nothing they did not have last season.

Material was yesterday being hauled on the vacant lot on Pike's Peak avenue west of Bieson's livery stable for a pavilion, which is to be used for a republican [illegible] They will make this city their future home.

Mr Hugh M Harbert editor of the Daily Pueblo Index, who has been ill for some time is now [illegible] and will soon be able to resume his duties.
